1. A Colonel Zlatev, who now calls himself General, is the leader of a resistance group that is active in the Balkan mountain range around Lovech. Zlatev is said to have been the commanding officer of a regiment in Lovech during the recent war.
2. In the Rila mountains a resistance group is led by a Bulgarian major using the nom de guerre "Genghis Khan", a name given him because of his long moustache. This individual is reportedly a former officer of the Bulgarian General Staff who fought against the Germans in Hungary and who was decorated with the order "Hero of the Soviet Union". It is said that he became an opponent of the Communists on his return home in 1945, and upon discovery escaped to the hills with seventy officers and men.
3. The group led by the so-called "Genghis Khan" is said to be the second largest resistance group in Bulgaria, but more active than that led by General Zlatev. "Genghis Khan" is reported to have attacked a concentration camp about 30 kilometers from the Bulgarian-Greek frontier on 20 August 1949, killing the guards and freeing some 5,000 inmates.
4. Resistance activity in Bulgaria is said to take the form of sabotage and liquidations of local Communist functionaries who have made themselves obnoxious to the population. Acts of sabotage are reportedly carried out against railroads and highways and those factories producing armament. The strength of Bulgarian resistance movements is currently estimated at 7,000 men. Members of the old Drasa Ribarije organization in Serbia are reported to maintain liaison with the Bulgarian resistance, supplying to it some arms from stocks hidden in the forests of Eastern Serbia. General Zlatev is described as the "commander" of the Bulgarian resistance groups.
